Real Reel Art Pep - Lovely Girls The normal male person retaining ome trace of the civilization which prevailed before the ghostly-and ghastly-hosts of moral theories inraded the domain of intelligence and usurped the rights of man enters the average movic house because he's temporarily dull mentally, has a little time for relaxation and, more particularly, because he has nowhere else to go.

There are of course several fetching inducements held forth by the crafty and astute magnates of the industry. They select toothsome morsels of the genus woman and display them in many and various poses. Occasionally they have sufficient courage to permit a scene objectionable to the vicious prides to survive. But seldem do they let a good story survive—not that they don't get good stories most often are welfd. almost unanimously their mentality has been displaced with sentimentality. Witness the amputation of the sensible climax in the excellent story of Holwerthy Hall, "The Six Best Cellars."

But the man who retains the spark asurped the rights of man enters the nounced intervals so the prespective pateron of art, if his time is limited or nis eyes are tired, will not be obliged to inquire of the fair damesel at the ticket window when the best part of the show begins. Doubtless he would rather stroll about and examine the summer hosiery than wait inside until the picture is paying to see is started. There is more worth while mental refreshment in a single brief seene of a focus bathing beauties parading in the wake of an imbedile at 40 miles an hour than there is in a dozen whole photoplays in which Harry the noble—son-of-the iniquitous-millionaire—and great need is pep, and the com-COLEMAN (K.) JONES.

THE DISH OF ADONIS Adonis, the youth so dearly beloved by Aphrodite, was the mythical god of manly beauty. And because lettuce was his favorite dish, it became immensely popular among the ancients. For once, modern science is in perfect accord with ancient mythology—both extol the virtues of lettuce.

Rich in mineral salts and, as served at CHILDS, crisp, tender and appetizing.

Robt. Louis Stevenson's "TREASURE ISLAND"

Directed By George H. Melford

 Here's a pictorial drama that will grip and enthrall you from the first to the last. Wolf Larsen, philosopher and brute, rules with might his crew of "The Ghost." His creed is one of lust and violence—that of the boy and girl aboard is that of love. In the end-but before that you must see a big liner smash through a crowded ferry-boat, the soul-stirring struggle with storm and fog at sea, the nutiny aboard "The Ghost" and the mad battle of sailors, Wolf's fateful light with his brother, "Death" Larsen, and the duel in the ship's cabin with the girl
